

While House Democrats have been quite unified in opposing Trump's extremist agenda, Democrats have also made some real missteps since Trump returned to the White House. For example, ending last fall's government shutdown without concrete steps to prevent healthcare cuts was a mistake, and Senate leadership should have done more to keep the caucus aligned.

Democrats are facing a credibility crisis and need to do things differently. We must focus like a laser on using the power we have to check Trump's power and deliver for people around cost of living. If Democrats take back the House, which is quite likely, we must use every ounce of power and leverage we have to reverse Trump's health care cuts, hold ICE accountable, regulate AI, and stop Trump's abuse of power. I look forward to electing Hakeem Jeffries Speaker of the House and pushing hard to ensure House leadership aggressively opposes Trump, passes a bold affordability agenda, and reins in AI corporations.
